Congressional Matters.

Washington, Sept. 2.—In the Senate Evarts presented resolutions of the Buffalo Merchants Exchange favoring reciprocity not only with the nations to the south, but with them on the north.

The House bill regarding lotteries, reported from the Postoffice Committee, was placed on the calendar, with a notification by Sawyer that be would ask its consideration as soon as the Tariff bill is passed.

The Tariff bill was then taken up and the sugar schedule considered. Carlisle gave notice that he would move to strike out all paragraphs relative to sugar bounties.

Hale offered a reciprocity amendment of which he had given notice on the 19th of June, and addressed the Senate upon it. The desirability of such interchange of products as the amendment proposed, he said, had been a subject which had given rise to the closest attention, and had resulted in grave and pertinent suggestions from eminert public men of the United States during the last 30 years. Whoever had seen the gradual falling proved that the same considerations States were also moving in the minds company for information as to why of eminent men from our sister re- they were discharged. An Eight-Hour Movement.

LIVERPOOL, Sept. 2.—At the session of the Trades Unions Congress to-day Mr. Watkin, President of the congress, delivered an address, in which he said he hoped the results of the congress would encourage a great labor revival. The time had undoubtedly arrived to energetically try to reduce the working day to eight hours. He did not think a bill providing for such a working day should be forced through the House of Commons immediately, irrespective of the wishes of the industries affected, but there was no reason why an eight hour day should not be considered immediately, as to those occunations which unmistabably wanted it. He advocated a direct representation of labor in Parliament, State control of the railways and a solution of the land question by naturalization.

While this operation was going on, the fellow was standing in the door, coolly looking at his victims, and firing first on one side of the train and then the other to overawe the passengers and the train crew. For State Senator.

Dr. A. Dawson, at the request of his many friends, has concluded to enter the race for State Senator. Dr. Dawson, it will be remembered, ran for the office during the Fair campaign, and, with the rest of the ticket, was knocked cold by Fair's sack, and Jerry Schooling was elected. He is closely identified with Washoe's interests, having lived here a great number of years, knows the needs of the county as well as any man could, has intelligence of no mean order, and, in fact, is in every way fitted for the trust. He is in no sense a political boss, but would have ten to one greater weight on the floor of the Senate than a baker's dozen of old political, office-seeking, would-be politicians. He is a gentleman of fine address, manly and straightforward in debate, with a clean personal and political record, and should command the hearty support of ever, delegate in the Convention.

THE Delaware river ship-buil ler Camp, professes to believe there is some mistake about the official record of the San Francisc.'s trial trip. Evidently he feels sore because she has beaten the time of the Philadelphia and Baltimore. The Bulletin says: When the first bid came from the Union Iron Works on a cruiser, the Charleston, an Eastern paper remarked that no one knew anything about such a steel ship-building plant in San Francisco, but as it had put in a bid probably it had the required facilities. They know more about it now, and probably they will soon know more about another es tablishment of like kind, the Risdon Works, which failed to get a contract in the last competition, but will probably be heard from

AT last there is hope for Kentucky. The leaders of one of her pereunial feuds have actually been arrested and held without bail. The court which has bad the cases under consideration was held under military guard in a tent, the Courthouse having been destroyed in the course of the feud. This incident may convince the Kentuckians that these disgraceful feuds have existed more by virtue of a lax of public sentiment in favor of law and order than any inherent difficulty in quelling them.

EITHER there has been previously a greater difference of opinion on Wall street regarding the silver question than has been generally supposed or a conversion has taken place there. Some of the most prominent fignuciers now say that the new silver legislation is likely to prove a good thing. Perhaps some of them are wise after the fact and indorse what they cannot help.

RUSS K. COLCORD came in from the east this morning and reports his Gubernatorial candidacy as looking well. He expressed confidence in the outcome. Messrs. Thompson and Powning are in the fight, with Woodburn looming up from the Comstock. It promises to be a very pretty fight, with the odds slightly in favor of Colcord.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A new sidewalk was to-day laid in front of the saloon lately occupied by Board of Trade sent Senators Jones Luigi Della Piazza. and Stewart and Congressman Bartine a letter asking them to name a day when they could meet with the Board to formulate some plan for the reclamation of our arid lands. Senator se Senator Stewart and Mr. Bartine have, pound. the public. Senator Stewart writes:

UNITED STATES SENATE, WASHINGTON, D. C., Aug. 26, 1890. \
Allen C. Bragg, Esq., Secretary
State Board of Trade of Nevada, Reno, Nevada—My Dear Sir: Your favor of the 12th instant, inviting me to name a day to meet the Nevada State Board of Trade for the purpose of formulating a plan to raise money to successfully carry out the work of reclaiming our arid lands and oncour-aging settlers to come to Nevada, has been received.

Trade at any time which will suit their convenience after my return to Nevada, which will be as soon as Congress adjourns. I appreciate the im-portance of acting upon some concerted plan to aid in the reclamation of the arid lands of our State and in the encouragement of settlers. I interested mysely in procuring appropriations for the location of reservoirs for the purpose of having them reserved, and the survey of high lines of ditches for the purpose of segregating the irrigable lands from other lands, but the execution of the law unfortu-nately fell into the hands of Major Powell, who had other and ulterior objects in view. He expended the money appropriated without accom-plishing the object designed or any part of it. The law will be repealed so far as the reservation of lands is concerned, and no more money will be left behind he appropriated to be squandered by the nearly $6,000.

Director of the Geological Survey.

I fear that it will be impossible to induce the General Government to do anything that will be beneficial to irrigation. I have therefore come to the conclusion that the best thing for Nevada is to secure from the Government vada is to secure from the Government, if possible, a donation of all the lands within the State, to be used to aid in the reclamation of desert lands. I believe that if the State owned all the lands that our people would be able to use them in such a manner as to aid materially in the construction of irrigation works and make room for settle ment. I shall do all in my power to secure the donation of the lands. I have alrerdy introduced a bill in the Senate for that purpose. It is not probable that it can be passed at this session of Congress. It is too late for such action, but if the people of our State think well of the movement, ward the vote is close between J. J. State think well of the movement, your Board of Trade can aid greatly in the passage of the bill. I trust the Board of Trade will consider this matter and also the provisions of a bill that ought to be passed donating the lands to the State. Yours truly, WM. M. STEWART.

CONGRESSMAN BARTINE'S LETTER.

House of Representatives,

Washington, Aug. 28, 1890.

Sir: Your letter requesting me to name a day when I can meet with the Board of Trade reached me in due time. I have deferred answering, thinking that I might specifically name the day, but I am not yet able to do so. I regret this, but the entire delegation will be in Nevada before very long, and I as one member will be only too glad to render all the assistance in my power in the work of reclaiming the desert wastes of our State. The work is in the highest degree commendable, and should receive the cordial approval of every citizen of the State.

CALIFORNIA WHEAT CROP ...

No Provision Made for Storage of the Bailroad ..

The Tulare (Cal.) Times says: Some one has figured that there was raised in the San Josquin Valley this season 60,000 carloads of grain, and that at the rate the railroad was now transporting the crop to tide-water it will take two years to land the crop at Port Costa. Wheat is being piled up Port Costa. Wheat is being piled up alongside the railroad at all the stations in this county, and the hot sum-mer sun is burning the sacks, so that if there is not soon a change in affairs the grain will have to be re-sacked. Many farmers in this county refuse to haul their grain to stations until they can be assured of quick transportation of their crops to tide-water. They can keep the sacked grain covered with straw while it is in the field, but it. would incur an additional expense to do this when at the railroad.

Senator Hawley has a rare souvenir. The paper, of course, has grown dingy under the friction of a century. The most interesting feature about the book. is the fact that the first statute pass by that immortal Congress, after that which prescribes the oath of office, the first act of general legislation, was a protective tariff. JESSIE'S OPPORTUNITY.

It Was Improved and Resulted Very Sat sfactorily.

"Wickliffe"-said Mr. Stone one merning as he looked up from the perusal of a note he had found on his breakfast plate, and fixed his eyes sternly on the face of his only son-"Miss Hall writes me that you are late at school so frequently that she considers it necessary to call my attent on to the fact. There is no excuse whatever for such tardiness, and if it hapens again I shall punish you severely. You understand me?"

'Yes, sir," answered Wickliffe, meek ly, his eyes on his plate, and his voice trembling a little. "I do try to get to school in time, father, but somehow or

"You are generally late," finished his father, as the boy hesitated. "Well, this bad habit must be broken up. or it will be a hindrance to you all your life. I hope I will not be called upon to punish you, but shall deem it my duty todo so if occasion requires."

Poor Wick! He found it difficult to cat his breakfast with those ominous words ringing in his ears. He knew by past experience what was meant by pulishment as interpreted by his father, i his appetite for the buckwheat akes on his plate failed suddenly. He didn't look at his mother, for he knew he couldn't bear very well the loving sympathy he felt sure was in her eyes. And he did not look at his sister Jessie for he felt equally sure she were a look of intense satisfaction.

He and Jessie had quarreled, and had not spoken to each other for two days. It was all about a blue silk umbre!la with a gold knob on the handle, which had been a gift to Jossie from her father on her last birthday. Wick had borrowed it one rainy day without asking, and had lost it. Jessie, who had a very hot temper, was extremely angry when she heard her brother's confession, and the result was a quarrel, during which both had made some very unjust and unkind remarks.

They didn't often quarrel. Wick loved his sister dearl', and was slow to anger-slow about every thing, in fact -but Jessie's starp tongue had stung him into saying a good deal that he afterwards regretted. But he wouldn't say so while she maintained that haughty manner and sullen silence. He knew that while she was in that state no apology, however humble, would be accepted. Jessie had no desire to heal the breach. The loss of her umbrella rankled still, and her anger and resentment received fresh fuel from the fact that she had to carry an old cotton umbrella when she went to visit the Art Gallery with Stina Ward, whose costume was perfect in every detail, and who smiled faintly—or so it seemed to sensitive Jessie-when the cotton atrocity in all its faded ugliness w raised during a brief shower.

It generally hurt Jessie as much to have Wick reprimanded as to be reprimanded herself. But this morning she was not sorry for him at all, and thought her father ought to have said a great deal more. 'That clock in the hall is to blame for Wick's leing late," said Mrs. Stone when breakfast was nearly over, and Wick was gathering up his books. "It runs a little slow. I think I had better alter the pendulum a trifle."

"Do not let him offer that as an excuse," said Mr. Stone. "I will not accept it. He can find out the time some other clock if the one in the ball is not to be depended on."

"I think I can make it run correctly," said Mrs. Stone. She went out into the hall, and Wick followed her to get his overcoat from the rack. "It will keep good time now," she said, as she raised the pendulum of the clock, and turned the hands shead ten minutes. "You will be able to depend on it after this, I think." "You are always so indulgent to Wick, mother," said Jessie, when her brother had gone, and Mr. Stone had retired to the library to read the morning paper. "And you make so many excuses for him. And as father says he has a habit of being slow, which ought to be broken while he is young. You know he is never in time for any thing." "Romember about the most and the beam, little daughter," said Mrs. Stone. "I know some one who ought to try to curb her temper while young, that it may not lead her into sorrow and cause her bitter regret. Score a small victory with each day, and the grand result will be gained before you are really aware of it." Jessie flushed hotly under her mother's tender glance, and went upstairs feeling decidedly uncomfortable. She had determined again and again to begin a war on her hot temper, but had let one opportunity after another slip by, and now, though she knew she ought to make up that quarrel with Wick, she wasn't roady to do it while her heart was so full of resentment.

She had been obliged to leave school for a time on account of some affection of her eyes, and as she could neither

The Celebrated French Cure,

But suddenly there came into her mind the words her mother had said about scoring a small victory every day over her temper. Here lay the opportunity to score a very great one. But would she take advantage of it?

She heard Wick whistling over his work. Time was passing. She must decide at once whether to seize this opportunity or not. Another five minutes delay and it would be too late. Wick's punishment would be assured, for had not his father said he must not rely on that hall clock?

"I—I will tell him," thought Jessie, something like a sob es caping her lips.
"T'll be stronger than my temper this once, anyhow," and not giving herself time to change her mind, she ran across the hall and threw open the door of her brother's room.
